A: It looks like you have a completely unpatched copy of vscan32.exe. To fix this, edit vscan32.exe in a text editor and search for "0 a53cf5803f4c3827". Change the hex number, and then copy/paste that change to another instance of vscan32.exe. Try again. A major focus of research in the past decade has been the identification of protein-interacting partners as more complete information about the connection between the interactors becomes available. Binding interactions between the protein partners may result in a direct or an indirect change in the activity or conformation of either protein, or may regulate the biochemical activity of one or both of the protein partners. Understanding the functional consequences of such interactions allows for the design of more effective therapeutics. Antibodies are proteins which are capable of binding to a specific antigen. A typical antibody is composed of two identical light chains and two identical heavy chains, having a total molecular weight of approximately 50 kilodaltons (kDa), each of which is comprised of a variable region (V) and a constant region (C). Each chain variable region has three complementarity determining regions (CDR1-CDR3) flanked by framework regions (FR1-FR4). Intervening between the CDRs and the constant regions are the framework regions. FR1 and FR4 comprise the N-terminal end of the V-regions, while FR2 and FR3 make up the C-terminal end of the V-regions. FR1 and FR3 are referred to as framework or constant region and the remainder of the V-regions and constant regions are referred to as the CDRs or variable regions. All heavy chains and half of the light chains are of the gamma (γ) class while the other half of the light chains and the other half of the heavy chains are of the mu (μ) class. There are three constant domains in the light chains (the kappa (κ) light chain has only one constant domain) and four constant domains in the heavy chains. These constant domains determine the class and the heavy chain type. The mu (μ) class is more flexible than the gamma (γ) class and is involved in binding to antigens whereas the gamma (γ) class is not. An antigen is a biological macromolecule or structure (e.g., a cell, virus, or antibody)
